

Namibian
Journal
of Social Justice

One of our key projects is to the annual publication of the Namibian Journal of Social Justice (NJSJ). This journal was formed by a group of academics and activists in 2020 with the aim of providing a space to critically engage with and contest the mainstream ideas that underpin the neoliberal global order. It is published by the Economic and Social Justice Trust and serves as an intellectual platform for social justice academics and activists in Namibia who want to critically question the neoliberal global order and search for alternatives. The journal aims to be a teaching and learning instrument for academics, teachers, students, workers, youth activists, policy makers and others who are willing to wage the struggle for social justice in Namibia.

The NJSJ creates a platform for a critical leftist analysis and ideas which will advance the struggle for social justice. In doing so, the journal upholds the principles of academic meticulousness and seek quality academic research output and analyses on social justice and related issues. At the same time, it is open to different forms of contributions (including opinion pieces, photo essays, case studies etc.) and prioritise substance over form. In other words, the NJSJ not only accepts academic articles of high quality but also publishes activist accounts of struggles in Namibia, Africa and globally.

The journal's first volume of 2021 dealt with the housing crisis while volume 2 of 2022 focused on inequality broadly. The third volume of 2023 dealt with livelihoods, informality and the changing nature of work. Volume 4 will deal with extractivism and climate justice and will be published towards the end of 2024. All volumes are available on the journal's website www.namsocialjustice.org
